

Outlook 2022: Dawn of a breakout era?

HOST BIO: Chris Hyzy

Chris Hyzy is managing director and chief investment officer at Bank of America Corporation, supporting Bank of America Private Bank and Merrill Lynch Wealth Management. He is responsible for determining the investment view for the wealth management businesses, developing and managing the asset allocation strategy, solutions due diligence, investment policies and guidance, and supporting the client-focused investment approach. Within the Private Bank, Chris is also responsible for the development and execution of investment strategy, including overall portfolio management, wealth planning and trading. Previously, he served as the chief investment strategist for U.S. Trust.

Before joining U.S. Trust, Chris was chief investment officer and head of product strategy for the Latin American market region of the Citigroup Private Bank. He chaired the Global Investment Themes Committee and was a voting member of the Investment Strategy Committee for the Citigroup Private Bank, and an active member of the Investment Policy Committee, the Product Strategy Committee and senior leadership team. Prior to his role at Citigroup, Chris was the director of Merrill's Investment Policy Group and head of the Investment Committee for International Private Clients. He also held investment positions, including director of the Global Portfolio Strategy Group for Private Wealth Advisory and senior international equity strategist for Merrill's Private Client and Middle Markets Group.

Chris earned a bachelor's degree in business from Villanova University and an MBA in finance from New York University's Stern School of Business. He serves on the Provost Board for Villanova University and the Finance Advisory Council for Villanova School of Business as well as the Finance and Investment Committee for the Congressional Medal of Honor Foundation.